The Siglo XXI Conference is organized by the Inter-University Program for Latino Research at the University of Illinois at Chicago and the Mexico Center at the University of Texas at San Antonio. It is co-sponsored by the University of Texas' Center for Mexican American Studies, Southwest Airlines, Trinity University and the Fulbright Association San Antonio Chapter.

The Inter-University Program for Latino Research (IUPLR) is a national consortium of twenty-five university-based centers dedicated to the advancement of knowledge about Latinos in the United States. Its principle objective since its inception in 1983 is to foster collaborative, interdisciplinary, and comparative research on the nation's Latino groups. IUPLR works to expand the pool of Latino scholarship and leadership while increasing the availability of policy-relevant, Latino-focused research.
