

<http://blogs.kcrw.com/whichwayla/2013/10/whats-working-and-what-isnt-for-the-young-latino-tv-audience>

What's working– and what isn't– for the young Latino TV audience?

MON OCT 14, 2013

Host:

- Kim Masters

Produced by:

- Darby Maloney

Listen to/Watch entire show:

Main Topic

Latino Bilingual TV (2:30PM)

Journalist Carolina Miranda brings us this story. In the coming months two new cable channels aimed at the young bilingual Latino audience will launch. Fusion is a collaboration between ABC and Univision; and El Rey is in part the brainchild of filmmaker Robert Rodriguez. They join the growing channels trying to reach this hard to find audience.

Guests:

- Carolina Miranda: independent cultural journalist, @cmonstah

Links:

- Carolina A. Miranda
- Fusion
- Fusion Announces Premiere Date and Prime-Time Schedule

- El Rey
- FactoryMade builds up cast of Hollywood players for El Rey Network
- Los Heroes Del Norte
- East Los High
- FX's The Bridge
- Devious Maids
- Mun2
- Tr3a

Engage & Discuss

Further the conversation with your thoughts and comments. Agree, disagree, present a different perspective -- engage.

Follow the discussion

Crystal · 2 days ago

I listened to this podcast today. I found the part by Carolina Miranda and Latino Bilingual TV really interesting. I am Mexican American living in Los Angeles and I am also first generation American so I felt like this was talking about me.

I think its interesting and positive that Universal and other major content providers are making channels with programming specifically aimed at Latinos. I have one major problem with it. Its a completely different channel.

I might be a different kind of Latino viewer, but I watch my entertainment content just like everyone else on the major networks and big cable channels and subscription channels like HBO. I'm sorry to say but I don't really watch anything in Spanish and until today had never heard of channels like Mundos and the others. I didn't even know about the Hulu show "East Los High."

I don't understand why it has to be on a separate completely different channel that not everyone has heard of. I think if they want to court Latinos, air a show about Latinos on NBC, CBS, ABC, or a major cable channel like AMC.

Like I said, I might be a different kind of Latina/Latino viewer. I think of myself as just a viewer. I like watching everything like Carolina Mlranda said but I would also like to see more Latino people on TV. Maybe a show like Scandal where the main lead is a strong Latina character. Just suggestions.

I like good stories about interesting people but maybe to me people from all cultures and all backgrounds are just as interesting!